Tayco's Up post-and-beam system wins silver at NeoCon.

A mid-sized, Toronto-based furniture and systems manufacturer has been recognized for innovation in design. Tayco was awarded Silver in the Alternative Office category, generally known for stiff competition amongst the biggest players in the industry.

"The Up post and beam system is designed for flexibility, workability and aesthetic appeal." says Dakota Kasdorf, Tayco's head of design, who's passion and vision drove the project. For Tayco, Up represents a major step forward in design approach. The company has been pleased with the reaction the product has been receiving. "The most common and immediate response has been "How can I implement this in my space?" And people who are new to the product are quickly coming up with some great ideas – it really supports our message of flexibility." adds Kasdorf.

Up is modern and attractive, and seems to hold worksurfaces in the air, rather than supporting them from the floor. Up is made from low-emitting components that promote healthy indoor air quality. It can be configured for numerous applications, from tasking and teaming, boardroom functions and touchdown stations.

Tayco has grown from the concept that people work better when they are comfortable. Thirty years ago that meant creating an office divider that deadened noise. Tayco's acoustic panel sold well and fueled growth. Panels turned into systems. Systems led to casegoods. Casegoods led to freestanding furniture, then boardroom furnishings, seating and other products.

Today, Tayco carries products to address every functional furnishing requirement of the modern office. Every Tayco product is designed to create comfort and facilitate productivity.
